

A white butterfly flew down
from the white clouds.

He flew along the river.
He flew over forests and fields.
Suddenly, he saw . . .

a flock of colorful butterflies.

They all wore shirts and hats.

They all had bags on their shoulders and held pens in their hands.

The white butterfly approached the colorful butterflies.

“Where are you going?” he asked.

“We are going to school,” they said.
“Do you want to come with us?”

“Yes, I do!” the white butterfly replied.

“But where is your shirt?” the butterflies asked.

“Where is your hat?”

“Where is your bag?”

“Where is your pen?”

“Oh no!” the white butterfly said.

“I do not have a shirt or a hat.
I do not have a bag or a pen.
What can I do?”

The white butterfly decided to go to the market.

First, the white butterfly flew to a clothing shop.

He asked the blue cricket,
“Do you have a red shirt?”

The blue cricket said, “Yes, I do. Here, try on this shirt made of red flowers.”

The white butterfly bought the red shirt.

Next, the white butterfly flew to a hat shop.

He asked the brown ant,
“Do you have a blue hat?”

The brown ant said, “Yes! Here is a hat made of blue flowers.”

The white butterfly bought the blue hat.

Next, the white butterfly went to a bag shop.

He asked the yellow bird,
“Do you have a green bag?”

The yellow bird said, “Yes! I have a bag made of green leaves.”

The white butterfly bought the green bag.

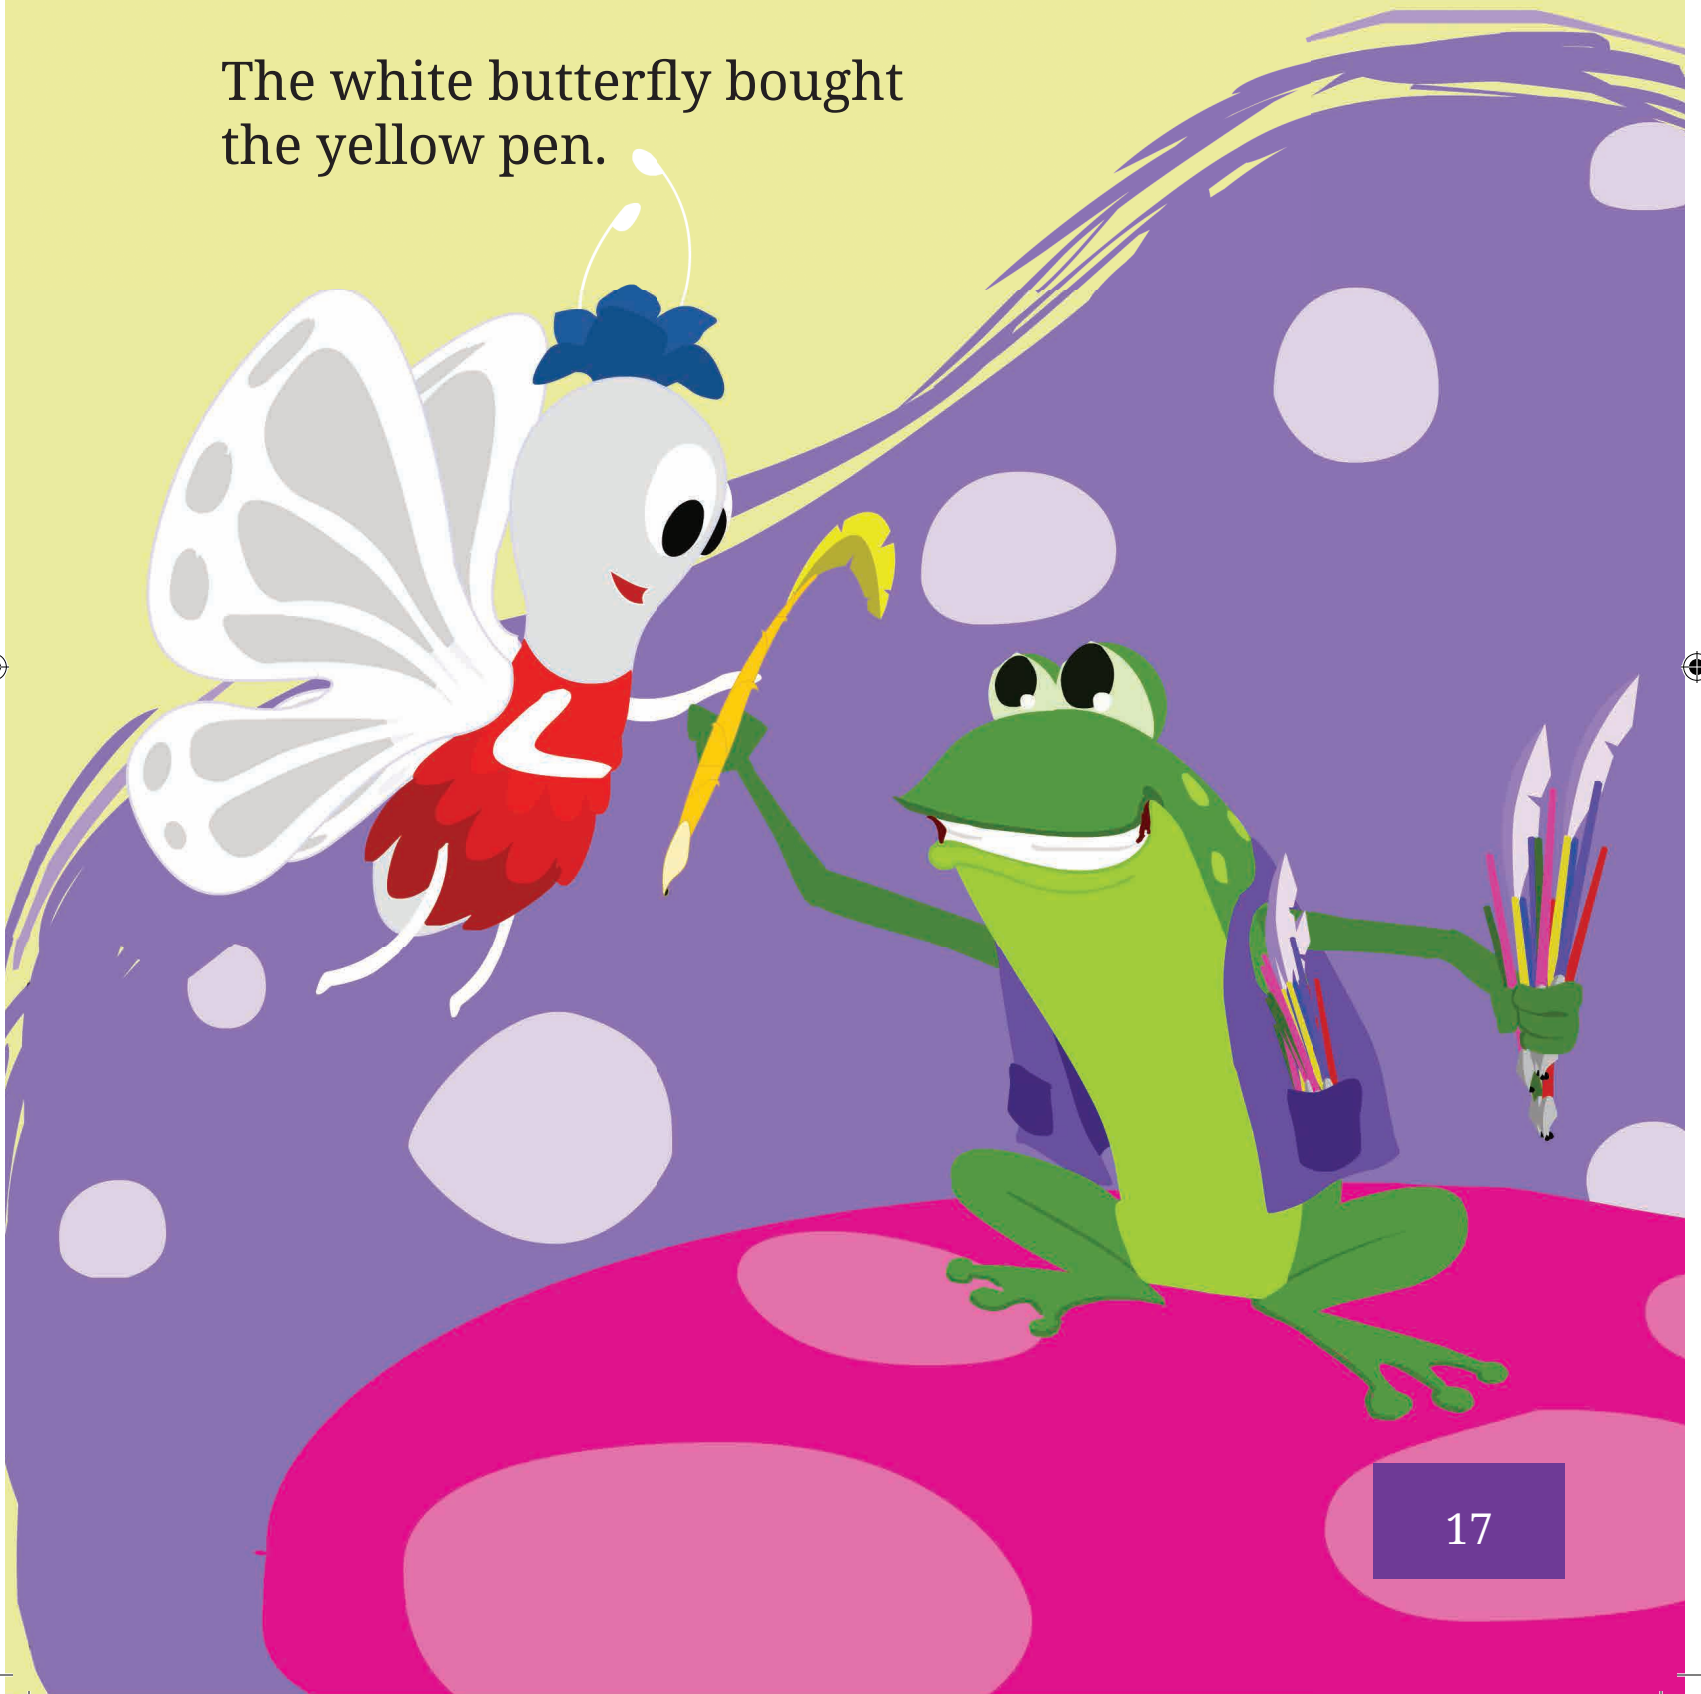

The white butterfly went to a stationery shop.

He asked the green frog,
“Do you have a yellow pen?”

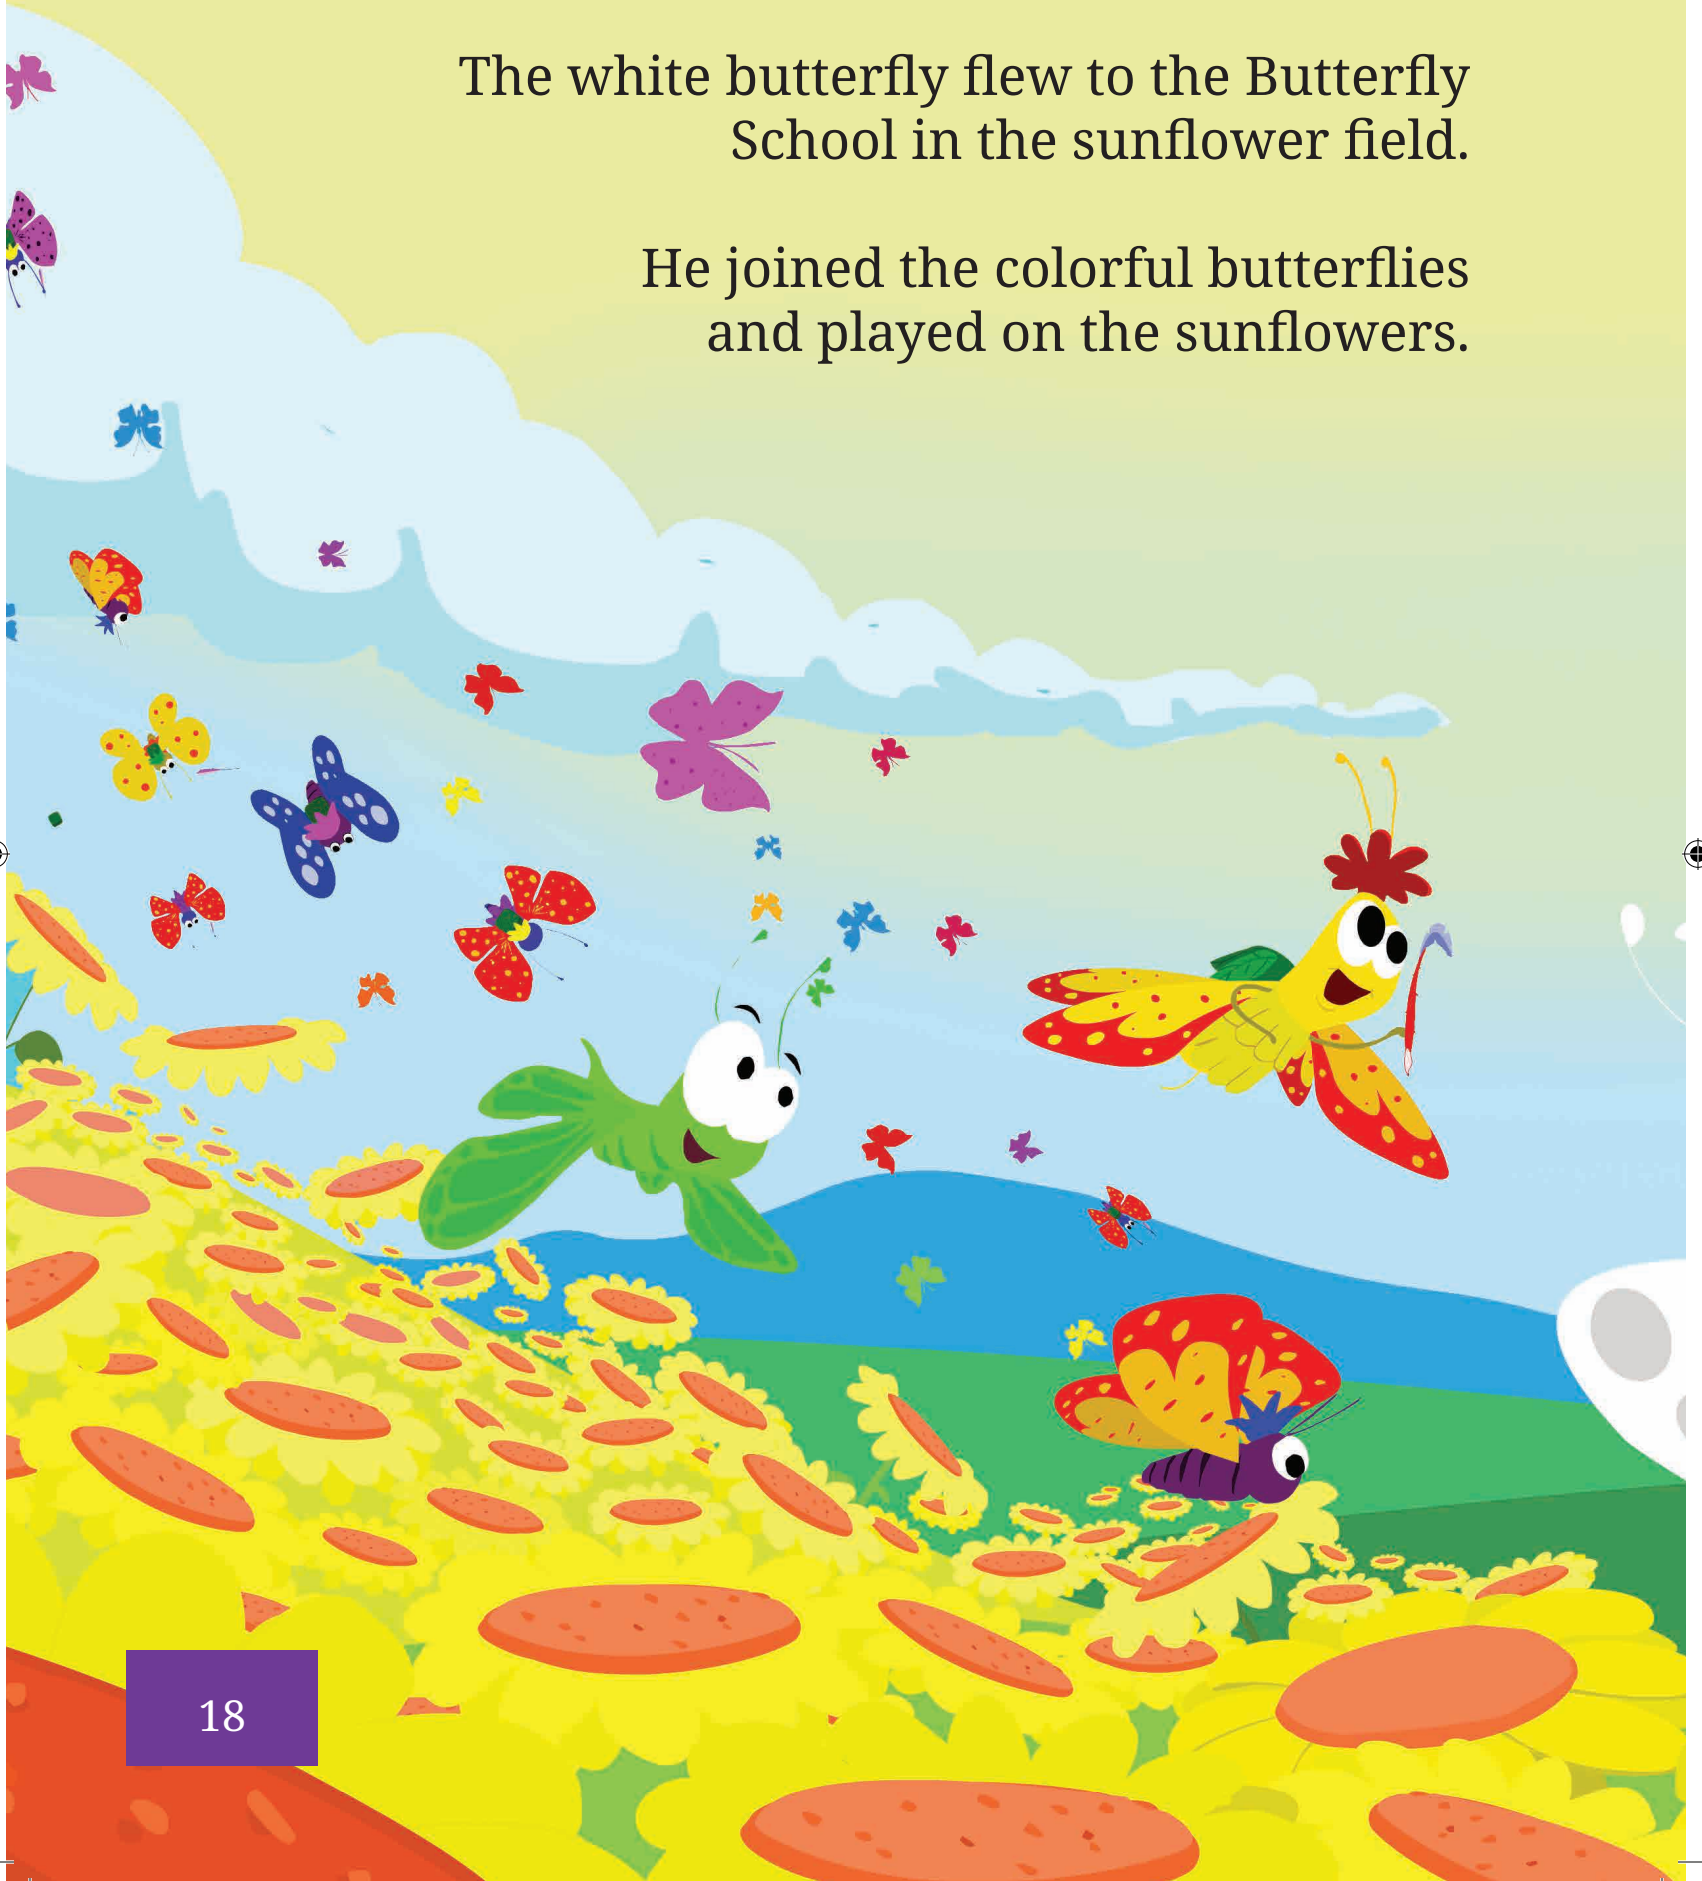

The green frog said,
“Yes, I do! Here you go.”

The white butterfly bought the yellow pen.

The white butterfly flew to the Butterfly
School in the sunflower field.

He joined the colorful butterflies and played on the sunflowers.

Everyone was ready for school!
